

A spirit less charitable towards those who do not from than those churchmen who are and as the platform of promiscuous religious assemblages, and no less disposed to show them any personal kindness in their power; but I have sworn to adhere to our church and to inform of sound words. That church I would believe the most perfect, and I cannot conscientiously give my support and influence to any other.

In the present times, we seem to revolve at a thing connected with order and regularity, but I trust that as a people we are not so much as we are, and that the church of England may ever be fast in this Colony, and that, standing in one spirit, her Clergy and Members may, through God's grace, resist every attempt to divide them, since every hope of good is derived from our Apostolic church would be defeated by a difference among ourselves. Let us not, however, mistake standing fast in the spirit for indifference. Unity is, indeed, precious in the sight of God, and lovely in the eyes of men; but it supposes that we are truly religious, for even differences are to be preferred to a hollow Christianity.

The following article which we copy from the Church, appears credited to the Georgetown Messenger. And surely, wealth in the hands of such men is great good, and to be gloried in rather than censured.

We hear much said of the enormous expenditure at which the Church of England is maintained, and many very honest persons suppose that the bishops of that Church are ever wallowing in wealth and luxury, it may not be improper to give the following, from the Christian Recorder, for August last. There will be required no comment of our own to make this article interesting to our readers. It is from the work of William Barwell, Architect, on Church Architecture, reviewed in that periodical.

It is well known that enormous sums are dispensed by the richer bishops in charities, and in the support of learning and religion. In our own days, and in the see of Durham alone, examples of munificence have been presented, such as we may vainly hope to see followed by some of our nobles in the states. The late venerated bishop Van Mildert laid out on an average £6000 or £7000 a year in building schools, and erecting churches, and in endowing, with ample means, the poor livings in his diocese. It has been shown that in one year, when the amount of fines received was unusually large, the Bishop's charities exceeded £35,000, and that in another year, when the revenues of the see were only £15,300, he gave upwards of four thousand to various charities. This princely minded man died poor, leaving to his widow nothing but a small sum for which he had insured his life some years before. Bishop Barrington, his predecessor, was of the same munificent disposition; and it appears from the Spectator, that the late Marquis of Epsom, who was for thirty years the Bishop of Exeter, gave very much exceeded £200,000. Now when the force of example on the surrounding gentry is taken into account, when it is remembered how much the erection and endowment of churches and schools depend upon the promised aid of the bishop, the impolicy of cutting the episcopal revenues down to the mere means of supporting the laboring dignity, will be at once apparent. Bishop Crewe converted the surplus of his income into perpetual wells of instruction and charity. He built and endowed a college, purchased and placed in trust for the poor, the ancient fortress of Bamburgh Castle, and its adjacent lands; and there alone, under his knowledge extends, are concentrated into one focus the great aims of charity. The ruined castle was repaired, and the keep converted into a defence against, and a consolation under shipwreck, on one of the most fatal coasts of the Island. The vaults were made cellars for storing away the relics of wrecked vessels, that the property might be saved for the owners; a dormitory, a refectory and wardrobe for the aid of one hundred shipwrecked persons, and at all times ready for such unfortunate persons; and whether sailors or passengers, they are clothed, fed, and kept at the castle on the bishop's charity, until perfectly refreshed, and ready to return to their ports, when they are supplied with money for their journey.

One floor of the keep is furnished with Captain Manby's apparatus for the preservation of life and property in shipwreck; a gun and bell are fixed on the top of the tower for signals in heavy weather, rewards are given to men who bring the earliest intelligence to the castle of vessels in distress, and proportionate prizes to those who venture most for the relief of the persons in distress; and whether sailors or passengers, they are clothed, fed, and kept at the castle on the bishop's charity, until perfectly refreshed, and ready to return to their ports, when they are supplied with money for their journey.

POSTSCRIPT.

GOOD NEWS! BURNING OF ST. CHARLES, AND SUPPOSED BURNING OF ST. DENIS.

Montreal, 27th Nov. 1837.
Yesterday morning intelligence arrived, that a large fire had been seen during the night in the direction of St. Charles; and about half past three the inference, which was generally drawn from this, was confirmed by authentic, though not official, news of the burning and taking of St. Charles, several hundred of the rebels having been killed or captured. Among the latter was said to be General Brown.

The above report is confirmed by private letters to gentlemen in town. It is further stated that Col. Wetherall has completely destroyed St. Charles by Congreve Rockets, and without losing a man, Mr. Papineau, as rumor has it, upon being requested by his subaltern, Brown, to assume the command, refused to do so, and drove off in his caleche towards the lines, upon which Brown drew a pistol and fired at him.

In addition to the above we learn the confirmation of the news of the destruction of Madam St. Germain's house, and the slaughter of 93 of the rebels by Colonel Hughes. Captain Markham, who was so badly wounded at St. Denis, is out of danger. The fate of Lieut. Weir is not known. It has been stated that he was betrayed by an Indian, this however, is untrue; the Montreal papers furnish the following statement:—

Lieut. Weir was despatched from Sorel upon a reconnaissance, and when he returned from that duty, the troops had marched. He hired a caleche to overtake them, and, being a stranger to the country, he was induced by the false direction of a Captain of Militia to take a different road from that on which the troops had marched, and was taken into the very head quarters of the revolt.

On Sunday night a large fire was seen in the direction of St. Denis, and as it burnt long, and extended some distance, it was supposed at Montreal that Col. Wetherall having reduced St. Charles, turned his attention to St. Denis, which shared the same fate.

At St. Denis, only 5 were killed, and 6 wounded. At St. Charles not a man was touched of the Government troops.

Mr. L. Viger is in prison for High Treason.
Now is the time for Lord Gosford to dissolve the Assembly, and call a new Parliament. It is the only chance for a re-action, if things are allowed to calm, there will be the old party there, all but weeping RUNNING Papineau and O'Callaghan.

DIED.
On Saturday morning, the 18th ult., at her Father's residence, in the First Concession of Thurlow, Rachael Maria, eldest daughter of Joseph P. Huyck, aged seventeen years and five months. Her death is deeply felt and lamented by a large circle of friends and acquaintances.

STEAM SAW MILL.

THIS Mill having been tried, the proprietor offers to the Public such facilities for getting Lumber, that he trusts his expectations will be realized by the patronage of a liberal and enterprising community.

It is his intention to be prepared to deliver SAWED LUMBER OF ALL DESCRIPTIONS FOR BUILDINGS, from joints not exceeding Forty feet in length, down to LATH of 4 to 8 feet long. Persons giving orders can have their Sash-stuff, Mouldings, DOOR AND WINDOW CASINGS, and in fact every description of small work made to size, ready for the Joiner, and at far less expense than the usual way of working up stuff by hand, as there will be no waste.

A Dry House will be attached to the premises in the Spring so that lumber can be thoroughly seasoned on very short notice, and the facilities for shipping are such that lumber can be sent to any port on the Bay, River or Lakes.

Customers' logs sawed on shares as is usual with other Mills, and logs bought at all times. Lumber over 22 feet in length, cannot be sawed before the opening of navigation, but will be (if required), shortly.

No admittance to the Mill except on business, by a note from the proprietor, or in company with him. Requests from individuals any time he may be at leisure.
